(By Representative Lorimer.) How many official grades of oats are there?--A. I don t remember how many there are; there is the white and the mixed--I think probably there are 7 or 8. Q. Are they numbered?--A. Yes. Q. (By Mr. C. J. Harris.) Is there any great difference between the inspections of different cities that are buying the products? What I mean is this: Could I ship grain from a Nebraska point and get a better inspection in Minneapolis than I could in Chicago, or could I get a better inspection in St. Louis than I could in Chicago, or vice versa?--A. I have known of some shippers at points that are in territory tributary to different markets having different rules who, knowing of the methods of inspection, would invariably ship grain of certain grades or of certain qualities to certain markets. The rules governing the inspections in each one of these markets are made for the purpose of classifying the grain in the territory tributary to that market which is supposed to come to that market. For a long time--I believe until the Northwest grain trade came into this market--we had no grades provided for the classification of that grain separate from the other, such as we have now. The Northwest, Minneapolis and Duluth, have no rules...
